Problem	Solution	Impact
Margin leakage was happening silently every week. Reps gave discounts on the spot to win jobs. Products were sold below cost. Customers quietly became unprofitable. Nobody flagged it until month-end by which point the invoices had gone out and the damage was done. There were no weekly checks, no alerts and no process. The commercial manager pulled margin data manually. The risk was invisible until it was too late to act.	I built a scheduled flow in Power Automate that runs every Monday at 8am. It pulls data from three Excel tables stored in SharePoint, Orders, Customers and Products updated weekly from an ERP export. The flow reads all three, picks out anything at risk, and sends one clean formatted email straight to management.	Every Monday morning, the full margin picture lands in management's inbox automatically. The team can see exactly where margin is being lost and act on it the same week before the damage compounds.

How It Works

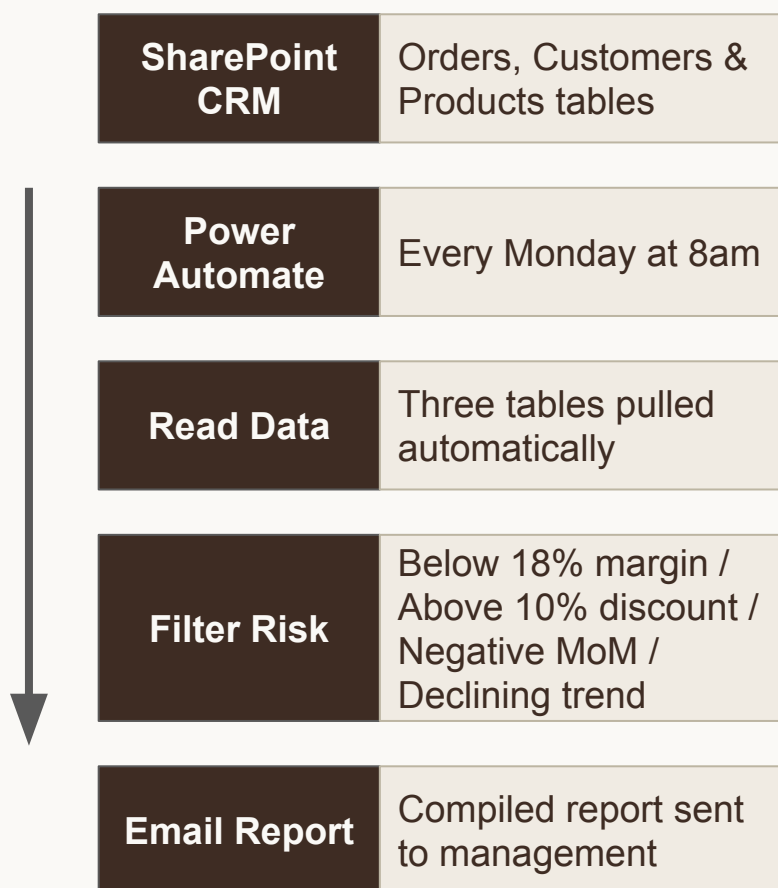

Four risk categories checked automatically every week:

- Orders below 18% margin
- Orders with discounts above 10%
- Customers whose margin is dropping month on month
- Products showing margin erosion vs previous month

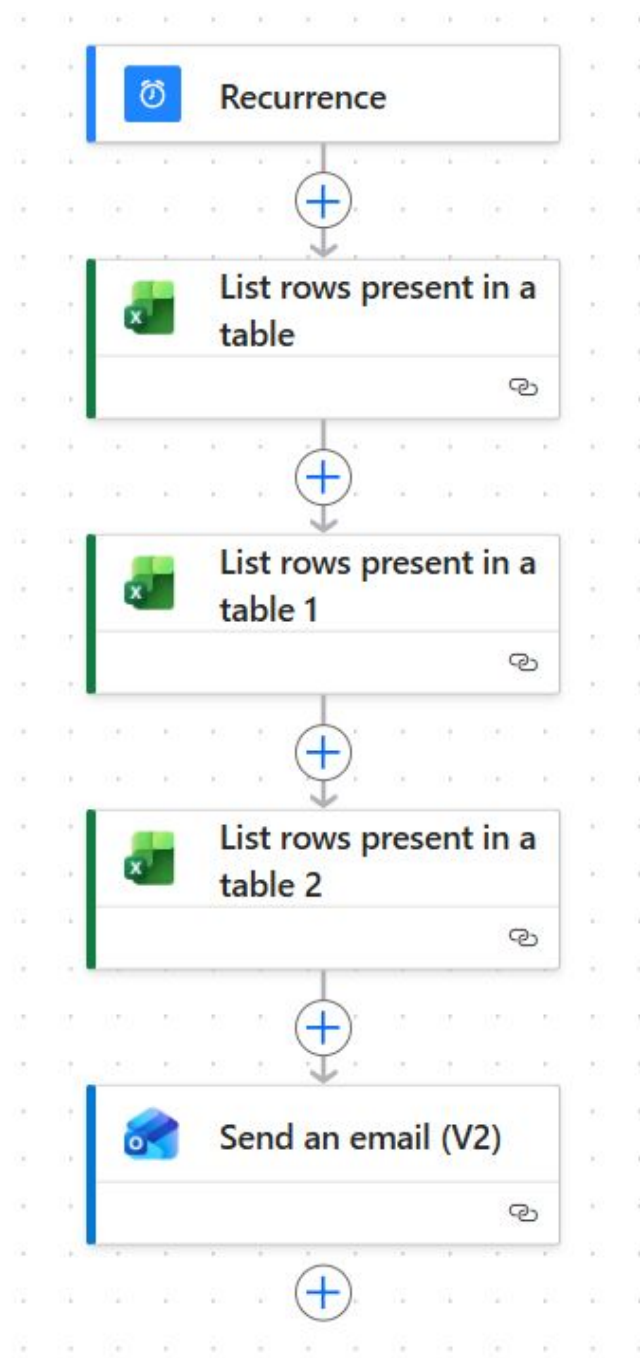

The email opens with three headline KPI tiles so management sees the risk at a glance along with the full detailed tables below.

Before This Automation	After This Automation
- Margin risk only visible at month end. - Low-margin and high-discount orders processed with no flag. - Commercial manager compiling reports manually every month.	- Margin risk report delivered automatically every Monday at 8am. - At-risk orders, declining customers and eroding products flagged weekly, zero manual effort - Management can act within days of an order being placed, not weeks after at month-end.

Built & Tested Independently

Built using Microsoft 365, replicating a workflow I recognised was missing after seeing margin leakage go undetected until month-end. All data is representative and contains no real customer or business information.
